Registration for the assembly and the hotel must be done online at lcwr.org.
We live in a time of incredible movement -- of people, goods, ideas, and challenges. Surely, there have been times in history that displaced millions of people, but the scale, the stakes, the responses are all new to our time. Pope Francis has called us to be a church that goes forth. The Spanish - “Iglesia en salida”- works better to illustrate the call: a Church always “leaving”. And, we have a lot of leaving to do -- out of our comfort zones, out of what we know, out of our own challenges. This invitation became very clear to me the last few weeks.

I just returned from a long trip abroad that included the LCWR annual visit to the Holy See, the CHA ecclesiology seminar, and my congregation’s co-sponsored CHRISTUS Health pilgrimage to Rome and Lyon. Small wonder I bear all the signs of a returned pilgrim: worn out and disoriented, with the crumpled clothes to go with it!

At each stop of my journey, I realized that there is no perspective without distance. We need to “go out,” to go forth or simply to “salir,” in order to see our call with better clarity. Our stories as women religious are filled with courageous women who “moved” -- left their familiar surroundings, engaged the world with conviction, and migrated to the far corners of the world. How are we going to participate today in this time of incredible movement? Are we even considering moving, any “salida”? Can we at least “move” a little distance away from our convictions?

During the LCWR visits, we participated in the papal audience. Hearing Pope Francis’ message repeated in one language after the other, greeting the pilgrims from Colombia, and Poland, and France, and Korea and Canada, and the United States I suddenly realized how “small” my image of church often is. We are a community bigger than our language, our race or culture, our nationalisms. A community called to unity by the joy of the Easter message. The realization can be overwhelming when you find yourself a simple pilgrim among many others the world over.

The CHA program brought me to Assisi where I felt as if I was hearing the story of Francis and Clare for the very first time. The beautiful Umbrian crisp spring day and the flowers everywhere helped, of course. You truly feel why Assisi is the City of Peace. But it was my fellow pilgrims, the men and women of Catholic healthcare today who brought me to tears at the tomb of Francis. Their willingness to learn, to witness to the healing ministry of Jesus Christ, their appreciation for our legacy and history and faith, made me realize that indeed we are all pilgrims on a journey.

And finally, as I stood before the holy sites of our co-sponsored ministry -- learning about the conviction and resilience of our founders, I was filled with awe for their “courage.” Reggie, a friend on the trip, noted Maya Angelou’s observation that courage is the most important character trait a person must have. And as I knelt on that Holy Ground, the very place where our sisters made the decisions to come to America, I prayed for their courage so we too may move, as they did, that we too may be filled with the conviction that the Gospel is far more important than any hardship, any complication, or any ideology.

May we all experience the perspective of pilgrimage, and return home ready to move, one more time!

LCWR. “With keen intelligence and strength of char-

During her presidency, the Tri-Conference on Religious

LCWR Assembly Lunches

Thursday, August 10

Leadership Pathways
Two different lunch conversations related to LCWR’s leadership development process, Leadership Pathways, will be available. One opportunity invites any interested member to learn how Leadership Pathways can help strengthen her capacities as a transformational leader and also provide a circle of companions on the journey of elected leadership. This lunch conversation is open to any LCWR member.

The second opportunity will be an informal gathering of members who have already or are currently participating in some segment of Leadership Pathways. This will allow cohort members who have met only virtually to meet and visit together. It will also provide an opportunity to offer feedback and insights on the Leadership
Pathways experience.

Translations of Occasional Papers
Interviews Available

Thanks to the generosity of the Dominican Sisters of Springfield, Illinois, translations into Spanish of two interviews from past issues of Occasional Pa-ners are now available: “Pursuing Our Dreams in Times of Darkness” with Constance FitzGerald, OCD; and “Living a Discerning Life in a Complex, Harsh World” with Margaret Wheatley. These and other translated articles can be found at lcwr.org/articles-pertinent-religious-life.

Any congregation that has translated other articles/interviews from LCWR publications and is willing to make them available for use by others is asked to contact Annmarie Sanders, IHM at asanders@lcwr.org.
Leading from Within Retreat

Leading from Within

is a retreat for LCWR members and LCWR associates who are serving in congregation leadership.

January 14 -- 19, 2018
Redemptorist Renewal Center -- Tucson, Arizona
desertrenewal.org

Join with other women religious leaders for a five-day retreat that will provide opportunities to reflect on the blessings and challenges of religious life leadership today. The days will include input, contemplative space, a variety of ritual experiences and some opportunity for individual conversation with one of the directors and sharing in small wisdom circles for those who choose.

Retreat Directors

Marie McCarthy, SP
Janet Mock, CSJ

Space is limited to 30 persons. More information and registration materials will be made available soon to all LCWR members.

Position Open at LCWR National Office in Maryland

LCWR is searching for potential candidates for the position of associate director of business and finance at LCWR. This is a critical position on the LCWR staff and the conference is looking for a person with the right set of skills and experience who could bring vision and creativity to this role.

In order to insure a smooth transition LCWR is interested in finding a new associate director for business and finance who could start by July 17.

The full job description for this position and application instructions are available at lcwr.org/media/news/lcwr-seeks-associate-director-business-and-finance. Applications are still being accepted. Questions about the position may be directed to Joan Marie Steadman, CSC, LCWR executive director at jsteadman@lcwr.org.

LCWR Makes Annual Visit to Rome

by Joan Marie Steadman, CSC, LCWR Executive Director

Recently, the LCWR presidency (Mary Pellegrino, CSJ; Teresa Maya, CCVI; and Marcia Allen, CSJ) and I represented LCWR in meetings with various Vatican officials.

The annual trip to Rome is in fact a pilgrimage. It is a journey that gives LCWR the opportunity to listen and to share. One comes away from such a journey with a deeper sense of the global church, a tangible experience of the impact of Pope Francis on the mission and priorities of the offices visited, and a desire to live the Gospel more deeply. In each of the conversations that took place there was a genuine spirit of welcome, a mutual desire to learn from and support one another, and a shared hope for the transformation of hearts and relationships in the global community.

Some of our visits were made with the representatives of the Conference of Major Superiors of Men and included:

- Congregation for Catholic Education
- Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples
- Congregation for Promoting Integral Human Development
- Pontifical Council for New Evangelization
- Pontifical Council for Social Communications

Since an ambassador to the Vatican from the United States has yet to be appointed there was a joint visit with the United States Embassy chargé d’affaires.

Mary and I had the blessing of being able to participate in a liturgy with Pope Francis at Santa Marta. After mass we were able to personally greet Pope Francis, extend the love and gratitude of the members of LCWR, and assure him of our prayers.

LCWR visited the following Vatican offices alone:

- Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith
- Congregation for Institutes of Consecrated Life and Societies of Apostolic Life
- Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue
- Vatican Secretary of State

LCWR also met with:

- Congregation leaders who have members in the United States
- Representatives of the Union of International Superiors General (UISG)

LCWR participated in a meeting sponsored by the GHR Foundation and UISG. There, Mary Johnson, SNDdeN, presented her study on International Sisters in the United States. Most of the participants were representatives of congregation leadership teams whose generales are in Rome. Mary’s study has implications for religious congregations far beyond the United States as they reflect on their own reality.

We also participated in the gathering with pilgrims from all over the world for the Wednesday audience with Pope Francis. The group reflected the global face of the church and the joy, energy and commitment to live the gospel that Pope Francis calls forth.

1. Congregation for Catholic Education
2. Pontifical Council for New Evangelization
4. Vatican Secretary of State
5. Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples
6. Congregation for Promoting Integral Human Development
7. UISG
Participants at the 2016 LCWR assembly processed their experience in deepening groups where they had the opportunity to engage in contemplative dialogue. Important insights arose from those dialogues which were collected and shared briefly during the assembly.

Throughout the year, LCWR is sharing some of these insights in various ways so that all members may utilize these thoughts and ideas for their own reflection. Individuals may wish to spend time with the insights personally, and leadership teams may want to consider them communally.

Embracing the Mystery: Living Transformation

- Trusting that our contemplation and contemplative dialogue allures us into Holy Mystery, we lovingly embrace our oneness with the entire cosmos.

- Dare to integrate contemplation and contemplative dialogue into the fabric and business of our congregational life to allow ourselves to love in Holy Mystery.

- In the darkness, receive the allure of unseen forward movement. This is the gift of religious life to the world.

Good Reads for Leaders

Small Great Things
by Jodi Picoult

Recommended by Pat Twohill, OP

All of us have heard it said by experts who know these things “Everyone is racist deep down.” I’ve always thought these theoreticians likely are correct, but silently in my heart of hearts I’ve hoped, “but surely they can’t mean me.” Reality takes some time to dawn, doesn’t it? But blessedly, if we live long enough and cultivate sufficient capacity for self-reflection, we do gain awareness of our implicit biases.

Racism is about more than just discrimination based on skin color. It’s also about the advantages often taken for granted by those with institutional power. If you are open to taking your “implicit bias pulse,” then you will love this book. Fair warning though: If you take up this book it will be hard to put it down, and there may be points when you are not sure you can keep reading. Receive Ruth’s, the main character’s, gift of hope. And enjoy all the characters that populate the pages who may remind you of friends and family members.

My congregation has been doing a lot of study this past year on the topic of “Living Interculturally.” This novel, Small Great Things, by Jodi Picoult provided me and our sisters and associates with a captivating point of entry for considering our own prejudices in a non-threatening way. If you are deeply committed to equality, diversity and to improving human relations, I invite you pick up this book and to read with hope.
NRRO Planning and Implementation Assistance

Six religious institutes gathered with National Religious Retirement Office (NRRO) staff and consultants for a Planning and Implementation Assistance Workshop at the Begamo Retreat Center, Dayton, OH, from April 25 to 27, 2017.

Institutes in Planning and Implementation Assistance spend roughly 12-24 months identifying their most pressing issues related to retirement funding and developing plans to address them. NRRO staff and consultants provide expertise and guidance through onsite visits, monthly phone call support, and other contacts. The consultation services are free to participants. Financial assistance for planning needs are available as is financial assistance for implementing solutions.

Examples of projects include development office audits, solar energy projects, studying land and building usage, motherhouse projects, and various eldercare concerns. Information on qualifications for participation is available at: (www.usccb.org/about/national-religious-retirement-office/planning-and-implementation-assistance.cfm) or by calling the office at 202-541-3215.
National Congress 2017

Registration for Congress 2017, Grace in the Now: The Gospel of Encounter, is now open. Encounter and grace, two themes that run through Pope Francis’ exhortations, will ground this year’s congress. Features such as the voices of younger religious responding to keynotes along with pre- and post-congress sessions and congress seminars will address current issues in initial and lifelong formation and help participants imagine new ways forward.

Registration information is available at www.relforcon.org.

Support LCWR Through the Purchase of Contemplative Insight Greeting Cards

LCWR has produced a set of 10 greeting cards (blank inside) based on the insights of its members that were voiced at the 2016 LCWR assembly.

Priced at just $10.00 for the set of 10, these folded cards make great gifts and are a means of sharing ideas about contemplation, communion, and Gospel-centered living. All proceeds from the sale of cards go toward supporting the work and mission of LCWR.

Cards may be purchased online at lcwr.org/item/contemplative-greeting-cards. For more information, contact Carol Glidden at cglidden@lcwr.org.
The Face of God Turns Toward the World

The readings of this post-Easter season are rich in images. The disciples struggle to understand the mystery of Jesus’ death and resurrection. We too seek understanding in a world fraught with pain and suffering. Solidarity remains standing with the people of South Sudan, the face of God, in an ever widening conflict.

When the UISG and USG took on the challenge of ministry in South Sudan, they also committed religious to build the capacity of the church, including two indigenous religious congregations, the St. Martin Brothers and the Sacred Heart Sisters.

The Sacred Heart Sisters were founded in Sudan in 1954 by Bishop Mazzoldi, an Italian Comboni missionary. Due to constant war, the sisters have often been displaced, losing their few houses and resources. In the mid-1980s they were forced to flee to Northern Uganda. The Sacred Heart Sisters, with two provinces, now serve in 15 dioceses in Uganda, Sudan, and Nairobi, Kenya. The congregation has 160 members from 46 different tribes. The official language of the congregation is English.

“Our Charism is ‘evangelization’, making Christ known and keeping him present among the most needy and abandoned through personal life witness. Called by God to preach His Good News among our people, we cannot separate preaching the Good News from solidarity with the poor… High priority is given to education as the means of liberating people from ignorance, poverty and low self-image, to bring them into the light of God and knowledge. The children are the hope of every nation; we do not neglect the adults in our services but we give priority to the children, especially in the field of education.”

Because of the ongoing civil wars (65+ years) the sisters in Sudan have few resources and need help to care for their elderly and sick sisters (relocated from Malakal in 2014 due to war). The Sudan province is in need of assistance to complete a province center in Juba for care of the elderly and to serve as a province office. Solidarity is educating some sisters as teachers and nurses; one has been trained in accounting and works in the office in Juba. These religious women are the “face of God” to their own people.

The development of these two congregations is important to the sustainability of the work of Solidarity. These religious are potential leaders of the institutions established by Solidarity.

Perhaps you would like to develop a partnership with the Sacred Heart Sisters.
